Directions for Break-out Groups

1. For each group, identify a person to record the group's notes and a person to present your conclusions to the rest of the group.
2. Review maps of existing resources in and around the study area. Make any necessary additions or changes to the maps.
3. Identify the areas of stability. These are areas that you wish to remain stable – they could be good neighborhoods or commercial areas, or important natural areas.
4. Identify opportunity areas: places along the corridor where change is expected or desired. Mark them in red on the map.
5. Make notes on the map of any desired aesthetic or design features (such as lighting, banners, benches, landscaping, or gateway amenities).
6. Develop a wish list – your group's top ten actions for the area. Write them all down on paper.
7. Once your group is finished, pin up your wish list.
